Are you going to aid to build Tulsa? How many five-cent pieces will you contribute?

Mr. Vesuvius is again in eruption. I thought so. Effect reached Tulsa on or about Tuesday.

The statehood question needs attention. It has been forgotten and neglected during the spring election campaigns of the territory.

Muskogee is to be congratulated upon its sweeping Republican victory. The result of the election is the best news emanating from that benighted city in many a day.

The Democrats are quaking in their boots for fear of a recount on the vote of Recorder, which office they secured by one vote. Undoubtedly a recount would elect Mr. Louderback, but the Republicans want the Democrats to have full swing in order that their misrepresentations and follies may be made apparent to the public. The consternation of the Democrats is quite humorous.

The Republican administration during the past year has waged war on the gambling element. The City Attorney passed the Vag law, which drove more gamblers from the city than any move ever made in the city. Furthermore, the administration took such aggressive steps against the gambling element, that on election day they fought bitterly against City Attorney Rice. It was their rallying cry. They piled up a big vote for him in their stronghold. This is one of the things the election returns show. I was known and commented upon election day. Yet the Democrat has the audacity to say that the Republican administration protected the gambling element.

The new editor of the Vinita Chief is in a bad way. He was called a liar to his face by three Vinita politicians, and of no common brand, either, as the editor himself tells it: "And not one of your plain, everyday, unvarnished liars, either, but a good, full-blown, bolsterous liar, embellished with profane trappings, and all the latest attachments."

BUILD FACTORY FOR FIVE CENTS.

Build another factory in Tulsa for five cents! You can do it.

Tulsa is a factory town. You will find more factories in Tulsa than in all the other cities of Indian Territory combined. The railway facilities, cheap fuel and power, are mainly the reasons for this, and Tulsa will continue to grow in importance as a factory town. But there will be ample room for all, and Tulsans can and should aid in every way in their power to swell the dinner bucket brigade.

How can you build a factory for five cents? Easy. YOU, MR. SMOKER, can build a factory for FIVE CENTS. A well known Tulsa manufacturer of good cigars has contemplated building a factory building for his plant. He has bought the lot, but as the business will not yet warrant the outlay of capital necessary for such a venture, he hesitates in making the venture. Now if Tulsa smokers would smoke Tulsa made cigars, the income of the local factory would be largely increased, and the factory built. EVERY TULSA MADE CIGAR BOUGHT BY TULSA SMOKERS IS A FIVE CENT CONTRIBUTION TOWARD A TULSA FACTORY. COUNT THE CIGARS SMOKED IN ONE DAY IN TULSA, AND SEE HOW LONG IT WOULD BE BEFORE ANOTHER FACTORY WOULD BE BUILT IN TULSA. NOT VERY LONG, EH?

What Was Needed.

Judge Henry Bosworth, of Springfield, Mass., is very fond of young people, but he is not blind to their faults. When the city was considering establishing a curfew law which would call the young people off the streets at an early hour, Judge Bosworth's opinion was sought.

"Well, gentlemen," said the good judge, in his slow, deliberate way, "I don't think we need a bell to get the boys and girls in at right half past eight as we do a bell to get 'em up in the morning."

It Killed Him.

A motherly old Irishwoman was endeavoring to persuade an ambitious young man to give up his nightly party duty and secure a day job, vigorously maintaining that day sleep was "a little benefit" and that night work was generally deleterious to health. "Quit it, me by," she pleaded with him. "Me fond husband worried 'bout for forty years, but it finally killed him."

Judge Wilson's Speech at Nahant.

In a semi-centennial celebration at Nahant, Mass., Judge J. T. Wilson in an address at the town hall, began this way:

"I don't want to make any elaborate speech, because when I was a small boy in a backwoods town in Maine they were holding a centennial celebration. The most prominent citizen was going to make a speech. He studied one for weeks beforehand, and learned it all by heart, word for word. Then when the day came he got up on the platform and began: 'A hundred years ago this town was a howling wilderness.' At this point he forgot the rest, but bravely continued: 'As I said before, 100 years ago this town was a howling wilderness and—er—wish to heavens it was now!'"

Pigeon in Long Confinement.

When the janitor of a Harrisburg, Pa., church opened the manhole of the steam heating boiler of the church the other morning a pigeon fluttered out. The manhole had not been opened since last summer. The only way the bird could have got into the hole was by descending a chimney 100 feet high, crawling thirty feet through a smoke-pipe, and twenty feet through the boiler. The man took the bird to the open air, when it shot up several hundred feet, and, getting its bearings, winged its way rapidly into the west.

Had Papa Dazed.

"What are you doing out here in the park?" asked the solicitous neighbor. "I'm thinking things over," answered the sincere man. "Some one told me that children ought to be encouraged to ask questions. I encouraged my youngest, and inside of thirty seconds he wanted to know who the next president will be and how long it will take to dig the Panama canal."

WANTED TO SEE HIS WEALTH.

In the Process, Depositor Made Trouble for the Cashier.

An old negro went to the bank in which he kept his hard-earned savings and asked the paying teller to give him all the money he had deposited. He offered no explanation of his sudden desire to withdraw his funds, and after vain argument with him the teller counted out the bills and delivered them to the old man. He eyed the paper money a moment and said:

"Kin I git dat in silver, boss?"

The teller assured him he could, and forthwith made the exchange. The old negro retired to a neighboring desk, remained crouched over it a long time, and then, to the teller's great surprise, returned to the window and gleefully thrust his money back through the pigeon-hole. Before he could speak, the old man said, grinning widely:

"Thanks, boss; you kin take it back. I jes' wanted 'ee of it wuz all there."—Harper's Weekly.

WISDOM IN CHINESE PROVERBS

Many Homely Truths Condensed Into Short Paragraphs.

The verbal wisdom of the Chinese has become proverbial and, appropriately enough, it shows itself prominently in their proverbs. Many of these have already been translated into English, but here are a few more, from a collection by Herr Bruno Navarra, published in Heidelberg, which may be welcome:

"It is better not to be than not to be anything." "Repentance is the dawn of virtue." "Even the highest tower stands on the ground." "Man thinks he knows everything, but woman knows better." "Even the man of the first-class has poor relations." "The carver of idols never worships idols; he knows too well what they are made of." "A day of grief is longer than a year of joy." And so on.—T. P.'s Weekly.

Superfluities.

Many will soon be asking—and earnestly, too, some of us—whether we are not becoming less luxurious in habit than formerly. The trade in superfluities, unfortunately, is extremely lean.—Drapers' Record.

CALLED ELIXIR OF LIFE.

Men of Eminence Testify to the Worth of Buttermilk.

Assuming that you have forsaken alcohol, and have found nothing to replace the glass of beer, try buttermilk in good condition, at its source, it is a genuinely refreshing, sharp drink—selt, but not thin like lemonade—nourishing, but not insipid like milk. It is a harmless substitute for intoxicants, a remedy for tuberculosis, and all pulmonary complaints, and beneficial to the digestion.

Russian Koumiss, nearly the same thing, is sour mare's milk, and it is well known that the tribes who drink it are immune from consumption. Koumiss has consequently been largely used as a cure for that disease. The famous Russian Count Tolstoy, who was at one time afflicted with tuberculosis, attributes his cure largely to the drinking of Koumiss in abundance while living in a tent on the Russian steppes.

A famous English physician, Sir Lauder Brunton, says of buttermilk that it "quenches the thirst, supplies food, and also contains a ferment which, if absorbed, may be useful in aiding the conversion of sugar into lactic acid within the body. I am inclined to attribute the benefits occasionally derived from the use of skummed milk to its possessing similar properties to buttermilk. But I consider the latter superior. When it is allowed to become very sour, and all its milk sugar has been converted into lactic acid, it would probably be still better."

According to Professor Metchnikoff, sour milk or buttermilk is a sort of elixir of life, in that it is a remedy for "the slow intoxications that weaken the resistance of the higher elements of the body."

Buttermilk is very easy of digestion and assimilation. In diabetes, where milk is more or less objectionable, buttermilk can be safely given with advantage. It is also given as a refrigerant.

Why They Waited.

Two young men, not much experienced in driving, went for a drive. During the ride the horse happened to yaw and the bit fell out of his mouth. Two hours later another man passed them and discovered both of the young men waiting with their conveyance by the roadside.

"What on earth is the matter with you?" I passed you when I was going out and now when I come back you're still here. What's the matter?"

"Oh," replied one of the young men, "we're waiting for the horse to yaw again so we can put the bit in."

German University Students.

Consul Liefeld reports 41,923 students in German universities, against 39,581 in the summer of 1904, 29,107 in the summer of 1895, 27,231 in 1885 and 16,441 in 1875, or an increase of 156 per cent in thirty years. The number of women matriculated in the South German universities, in all of which women are admitted, if not welcomed, was 137. Besides these 1,049 were registered as in attendance at certain courses.
